This course examines films made in Japan from the 1950s through the 2000s in genres ranging from the literary biopic to the Tokugawa-era period piece, the family drama and the exploitation B-movie. The instructor has made his selections with a view toward showing students films that they probably have not yet seen and that are historically and culturally relevant as well as entertaining. Students will read both literary and scholarly works providing a context for the movies viewed.
